Hypertension in Pregnancy – Practical Concerns

Hypertensive disease is one of the leading causes of maternal mortality.

“Reviews of maternal mortality data reveal that deaths could be avoided if health-care providers remain alert to the likelihood that preeclampsia will progress.”

Hemorrhagic stroke is shown to be the leading direct cause of mortality in preeclampsia with severe features.

“Delivery is the cure” is widely accepted, but it is clear that in many cases the multi-system pathology continues for a variable amount of time following delivery and can be a major scenario for adverse maternal events.

Early diagnosis, close medical supervision and timely delivery are cardinal requirements of the management of preeclampsia.
